Consult the Game Affairs of the Court: Choice of Romance cards in your hand to learn what your child will look like and how he/she will adapt to the court. Playable Characters: Description: Katsu, the Great Red Dragon. The Dragon Princess was crushed under the weight of the gold necklace that Katsu gave her as an engagement gift to his son, the young King Antonio. But Queen Raquette's love for her husband was beyond her steel-like character. Raving mad in passion and drowning in passion, she gave herself over to the wandering boy with rose-colored eyes. They have been wending their way through the forest, while teaching the young king about the ways of the true Vampire Land. But the story takes a tragic turn when their path intersects the eyes of a female Vampire. Hearing their cries for help, an honorable knight, aided by a giant of the woods, descends on the scene to assist them. They are confronted by a fearsome monster, the worst of all beasts- the flesh-eating giant Dragon! Though they are all carrying weapons from the Dragon Princess's court, they are no match for the giant Dragon, and are all slain. The only ones to survive is the knight, Lady Raquette and the young king. The knight, greatsword in hand, recalls the teachings of his sire and retreats before the rest of his company of heroes. Crushing his greatsword on the ground, he backs away- he is a Life Mage! His Code of Magic teaches that he must not harm any human or beast he encounters. His oath to the Vampire Princess's son is sworn before the eyes of the new King Antonio! Can the Knight help the boy and the maiden, or will he become a monster and consume the flesh of the noble, valiant vampire knight? So far, the Young King, the hero, has not offered an opinion on this, but his tender heart is touched when he learns that the two creatures need help! He bravely sets aside his anger toward his father's murderer, and takes on the role of a knight. It must have been a Christmas and New Year's gift to a child: A monster-fighting knight and a poor, defenseless lady! The two creatures who had been reduced to the state of animals are suddenly given the chance to live by a kind-hearted nobleman. This is just another Christmas and

Q: Correct way to download a file with file_get_contents I have written an application, and I'm trying to get the php file that will output the file I have downloaded in my DB. I've already managed to do this, and I've stripped the code and all it's now doing is returning a var_dump() with the name of the file in the database. I have this $content; in my code: $content = file_get_contents($_GET['download']); $encoded = base64_encode($content); The problem now is that when I echo $encoded it also shows the file name, but I need to do that in a different way, since I need to return the content of the file in my php file, and the $content var is not the file but a var_dump with the name of the file (the name of the file is in the db) what I need to do is break the $content var and do a while with the print_r($content); and then on the end print out the file name, that is what I need to return to my html file. EDIT: I have tried to use file_get_contents as followed: file_get_contents($file=mysql_result($result,'local_filename')); file_get_contents($file); file_put_contents($file,base64_encode($content)); But now I got that the file is always empty since there's no content to the $file variable. Any idea why? A: You need to encode the data you're writing to disk. One way to do that (outside PHP) is via Base64: $d = gzcompress($data); $p = gzinflate(base64_encode($d)); file_put_contents($file, $p); You can set the defaults for

FEATURES: - Crossplatform- Fullscreen play - 12 Levels of increasing difficulty: Easy, Normal, Hard, Master - Stunning visuals for a 3-D platformer - Customizable Ball - 20 Music Tracks - An hilarious and oddball story about an interdimensional jumping ball Platformers are one of the most popular genres of videogames, mostly because of the inherent difficulty in mastering control mechanics. Rotation, teleportation, jumping, ground and air-based combat, power-ups... There are as many ways to control a platformer as there are levels. Due to this, platformers are typically not as popular as other genres of videogames. However, if you master the controls of a platformer, you can spend as much time as you want customizing your character in the same way you customize characters of other genres. A bunch of us at G5 Games have been thinking about putting together a puzzle platformer that uses minimal characters and controls, so we started working on a prototype named Trundle. Our main goal was to create a game that focused on gameplay over story, and to have a character that represents the player in all aspects of the game. We started toying around with the idea of using a ball as a platformer character, and at that point we decided to use a similar yet unique control scheme of Star Fox. Instead of grabbing and tapping a joystick, we made our character jump by pressing up and rolling on the ground. We then spent the next few months making Trundle. The production time was split in three roughly month blocks. The first block, from March to June, we spent mostly on designing the levels, most of them taking place in space, and making the main character. The second block, from July to August, we spent our time in the jam, making the game, and at that point we were really excited about the production of our game. The last block, from September to December, we spent mostly on finalizing the game. For the first time in G5 Games history, we had two "jam" days. On Saturday, October 5, and Sunday, October 6, we had a day filled with production of Trundle. One person had to playtest, one person had to design a level, one person had to design a new character, and the rest of us worked on prototyping, programming, art, and sound. We had planned to produce the entire game in three blocks,

Are you ready to take on the challenge? Can you solve the puzzles at each new level? Are you ready to see how much you can get? Fluidity The game was inspired by the natural phenomenon of water, a fluid that is used in real life, having many properties, but is most importantly, is free, dynamic, she is elastic, while maintaining its volume and as if by magic, although not really, everything disappears, everything dissolves and re-appears. This is the fundamental property of water in contrast to other fluids, for example oil, gas, etc. This is the nature of water. And what about us? As we move, we are governed by fluid dynamics. As we need to breathe, we are in fact breathing water. Is water static, stationary? No. It is, of course, flowing, but not really like a river, but more like a meridional movement of water, a great surging movement, without apparent direction and hardly any forward movement. This property makes the emergence of the game interesting and useful in this respect. There is a great difference between these two states of water, the liquid state and the gas state. The gas state is, of course, boiling water. The liquid state is, of course, water flowing. The difference between these two states is inherent in the nature of water. And which is the difference? The gas state is air bubbles, they are relatively small and free. The liquid state is the great, big, giant water waves, they are relatively free. It is the surface that is different. The surface of the air is the same as the surface of the air. The surface of the water is different. It has a great shape, it has many cavities, it has many different pores. This fluid state is all about the capacity of water to adapt to its environment. It is a phenomenon known as the existence of the liquid-gas transition. But it is a mystery that makes water unique. The one who has immersed himself in the liquid state is a kamikaze, who has experienced the great water wave and the incredible ocean. This is the ocean, has anyone has such an experience? What could be more amazing than this? It is the liquid state. This is the fluid state. Without the transition to the gas state, our lives would be unbearable. How can it be? In the gas state, the air is fixed, all of the time. The liquid state is changing constantly. The liquid
