Gov. Mike Pence said in a statement that he would not intervene. "The state of Indiana will not be an obstacle to the passage of federal Second Amendment rights," Pence said in a statement released after he met with family members of shooting victims. "A state should be limited to performing its constitutional function of protecting its citizens. A state may not perform an extraconstitutional function," he said. Pence's statement was the clearest indication yet that the Republican-dominated legislature is likely to narrowly pass a bill that also would allow people to openly carry guns in schools and other public places in Indiana 0cc13bf012
