When you are creating a web image, you want it to be built for iPad retina and work on the latest devices. You want it to look as good on an iPad as it does on a desktop, Mac, or even a TV.

Adobe allowed us to preview some of their new web development tools on an iPad. There are good and bad things about the preview. For example, we miss a lot of the desktop tools that we use in the web. For example, we miss the ability to use our favorite keyboard shortcuts. We also miss some of the tools we use on a Mac desktop (we really missed the ability to add highlights and masks). A source-control tool, like a best friend, helps you keep your work pristine. A source-control editor doesn't just automatically keep you from messing up: its tools and features let you look back in time, see what others have done, and if necessary, let you cross check what you've already done. A Photoshop resident iOS app, Photoshop Touch 2021, enables image editing with a unique set of tools and features on the iPhone, making it possible to create and share images that respond to touch on the iPhone.
